How To Use This Guide

There is a lot of information in the guide - don't get overwhelmed. We have done the work for you. All you need to do is:

1. Take our Hair Quiz.
2. Read the short introduction in the guide.
3. Review the icons at the top of the guide.
4. Check the icons underneath each product.
5. Match the icons with those at the top of the guide.
6. Select those products that match your hair characteristics. For example, if your hair is thin or thinning (low density) look for products that are marked for low density hair.
7. If you are allergic to certain ingredients, such as aloe or coconut, avoid products with those icons.
8. If your hair is limp or damaged, pick products with the protein icon.

With these 8 easy steps, you will be left with a small selection of products that are ideal for your hair!

Our hair is made of keratin, a protein. Proteins are large complex molecules and essential for strong, healthy hair. Hair may lose protein because of chemical treatments (bleaching, coloring, perming, straightening, etc.) or by prolonged exposure to solar radiation. Replenishing protein is important to maintain strong, bouncy curls.

Do all curls need protein-containing products?

If your hair has adequate protein, then adding more protein may cause it to become hard and rigid. However, using a shampoo, conditioner, and deep conditioner with at least some protein is ideal. Hair without adequate protein is limp, mushy, and the curls don't hold.

Can you overload your hair with protein?

When it comes to protein, it is all about balance. If you overload your hair with protein and not enough moisture, strands can become dry, brittle, and prone to breakage. Balanced curls will feel healthier, have more bounce, and look less frizzy.

What hair types should be careful of protein overload?

If your hair is fine, or if you have low porosity hair, you should avoid protein-rich products. Fine hair is more delicate by nature, so too much protein can make it brittle and lead to breakage. Low porosity hair has difficulty absorbing moisture. Too much protein can easily overload this hair type leaving it once again, dry and brittle. Curly or coily hair that has not been chemically treated or colored, likely falls into the low porosity category.

Rotating protein-containing products with some without protein can be beneficial. For example, a moisturizing conditioner or deep conditioner paired with a protein product (leave-in, cream, mousse and/or gel) often works well as the protein helps seal in the extra moisture.

Chemically treated, colored, or heat-damaged hair is often high-porosity and needs protein along with regular protein treatments. The more damaged the hair, the greater the extent proteins will be absorbed and retained.

What are the best hair protein-based products for curly hair?

Shampoos, conditioners, and stylers often contain protein, but in a lower amount than you would find in a protein treatment. Because of the lower amount of protein, it is fine to use them weekly. For most curlies, a little bit of protein and plenty of moisture on a biweekly or weekly basis is ideal. This combination keeps the hair strong and healthy.

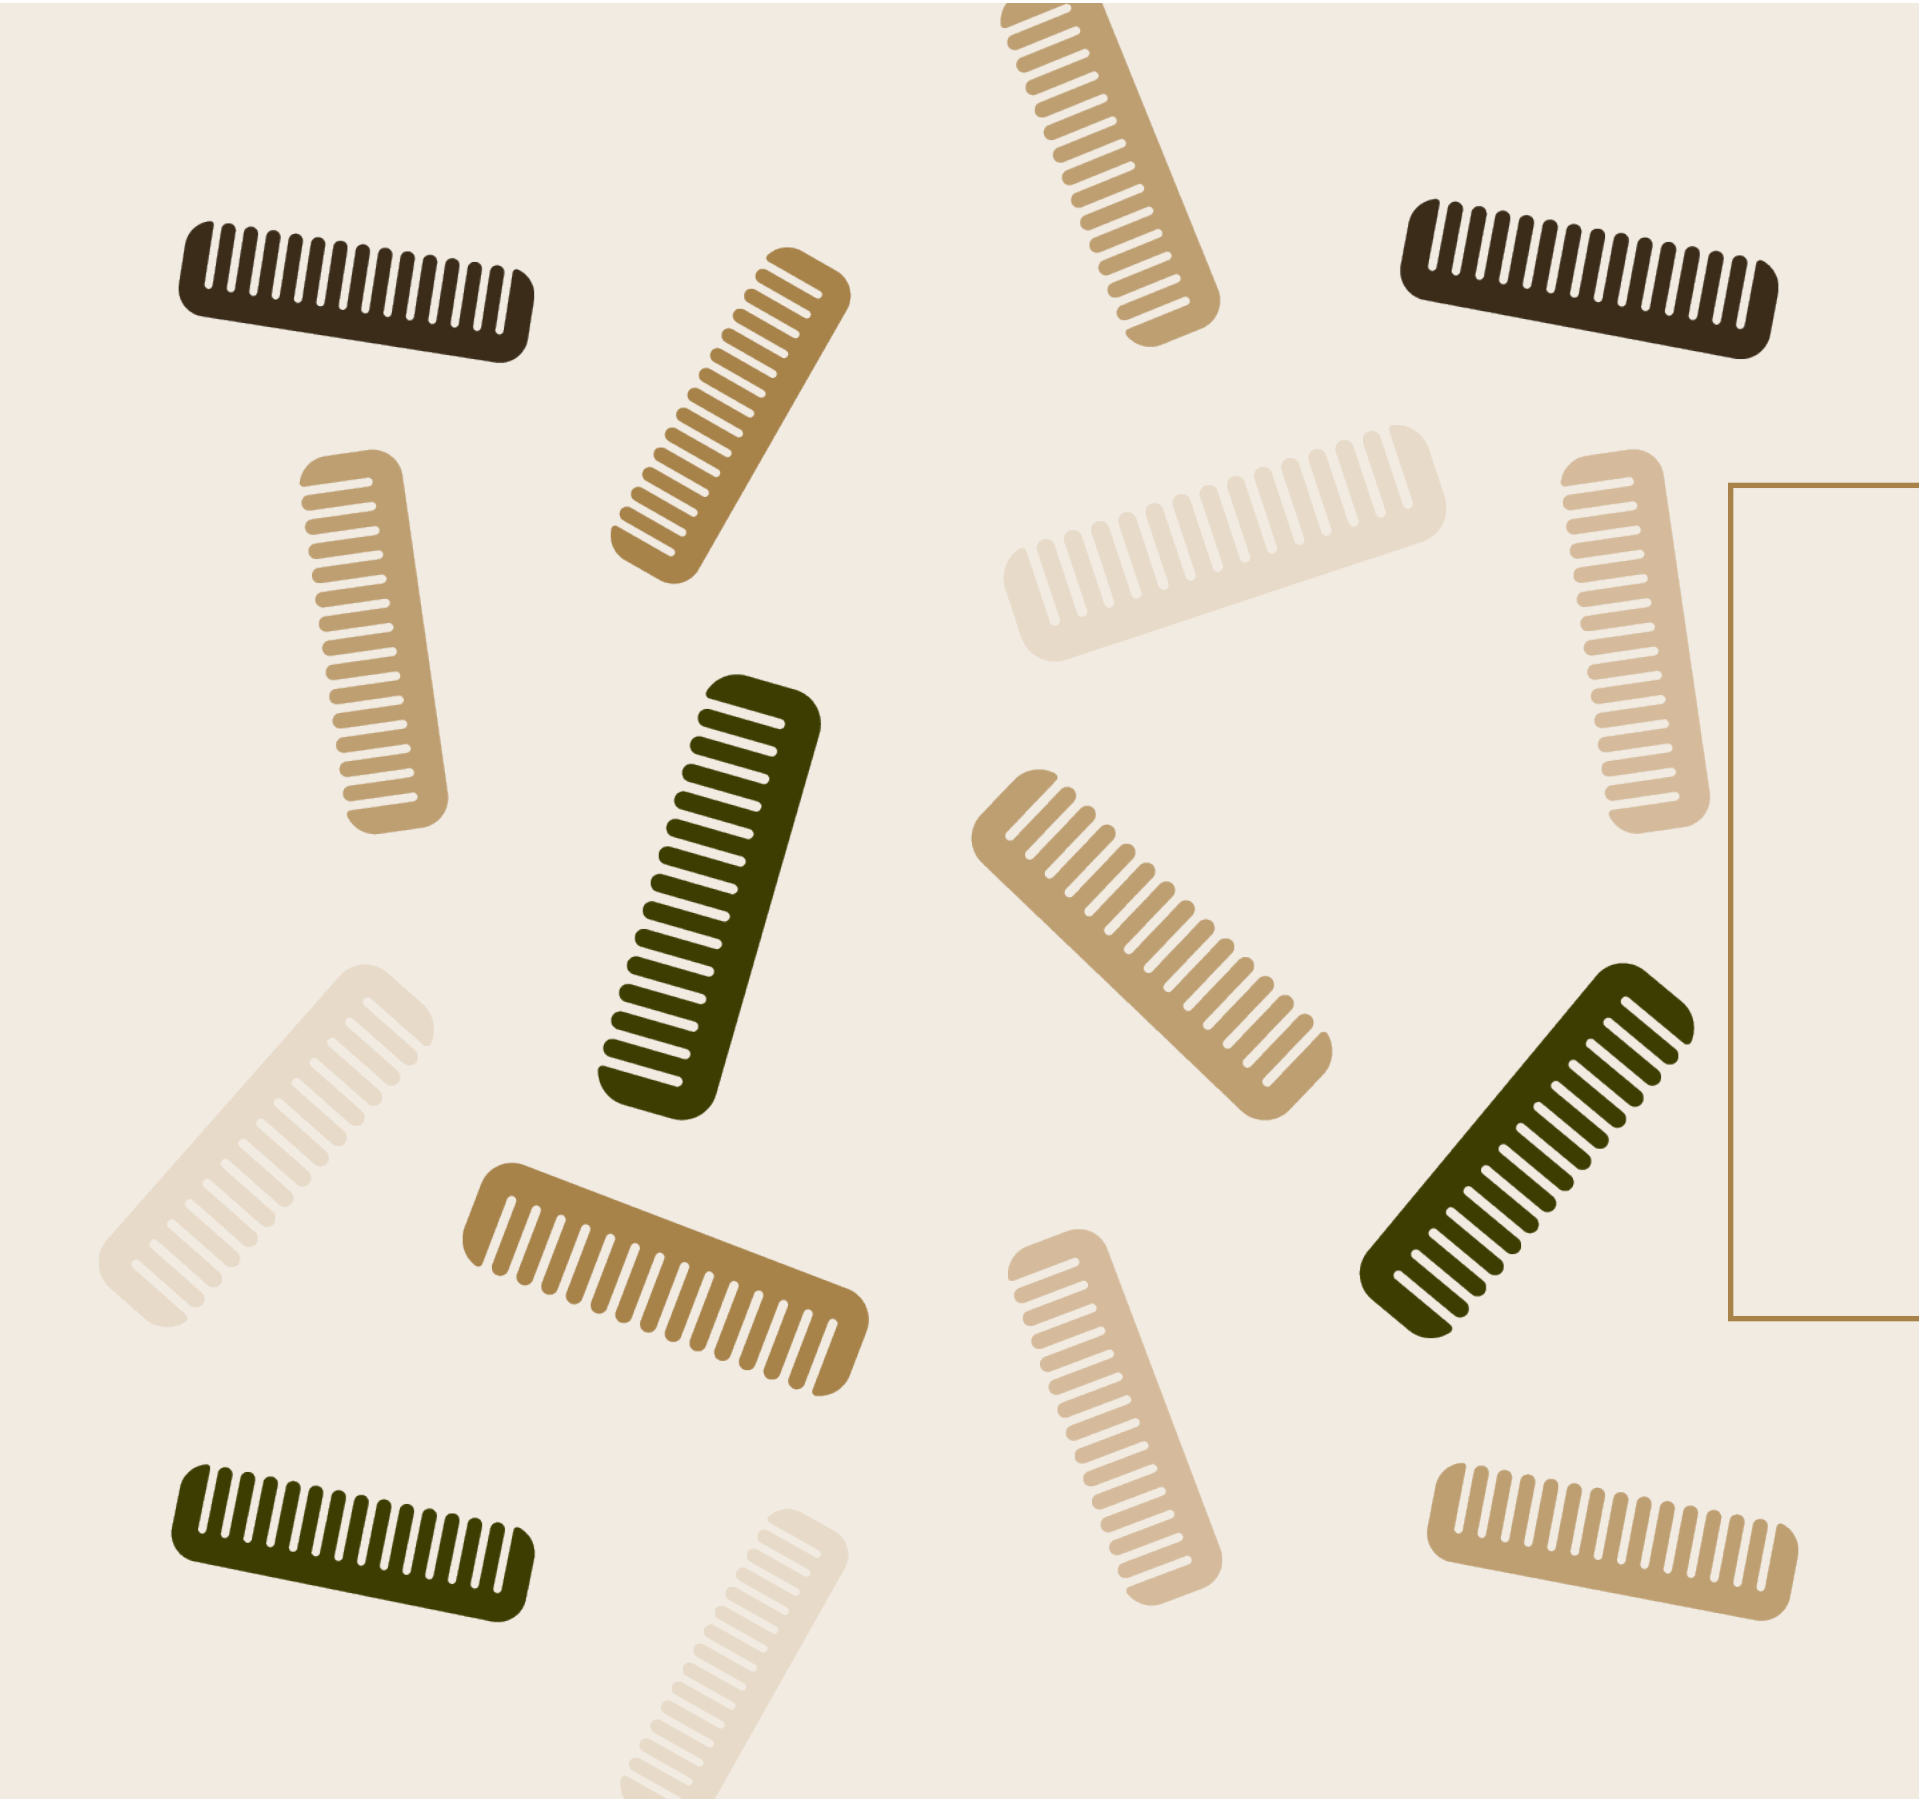

What are hydrolyzed proteins?

Hydrolyzed proteins have been broken down to smaller bits so they penetrate the cuticle layer and are easily absorbed into the hair fiber. Absorption into the hair fiber increases the strength and elasticity of the hair. These smaller proteins also bind quickly and aggressively to the outside of hair fibers to provide moisture-retention, humectant properties, smoothing and detangling, as well as shine.
