GUIDE TO 100+ CLARIFYING SHAMPOOS Without Sulfates

Introduction

Even if you follow the Curly Girl Method, you are more likely than not to experience some type of build-up from CG approved products including no poos, conditioners, oils, mousses, leave-ins, gels, etc. This is even more important if you do any variety of the LOC (leave-in, oil, cream) method and use oils and hair butters.

If you do not regularly clarify your scalp and hair, you will be effectively trying to moisturize dry hair, because moisture is unable to get in.

A co-wash or Apple Cider Vinegar rinse will not remove all of the build-up resulting from these products and if certain ingredients remain on the scalp and hair, you may experience a dry, itchy scalp in addition to stringy, matted, dull, frizzy, or sticky hair.

Clarifying is recommended no more than 2-4 times a month, but obviously, your hair and scalp will let you know when it's time. Always deep condition after using a clarifying shampoo as these can be drying.

Clarifying agents include anionic surfactants such as sulfates and sulfonates. Although very good in removing sebum and dirt, sulfated shampoos are strong cleaners and may increase the electrical negative charges on the hair surface leading to frizz and friction.

Sulfates possess a carbon, oxygen, sulfur bond. Some well known sulfates include sodium lauryl sulfate and sodium laureth sulfate, ammonium lauryl sulfate, and ammonium laureth sulfate. The issue with sulfates is that they typically have a high pH, putting them in the alkaline range. The high pH disrupts the acid mantle on the scalp, which has a pH of around 5.5. Surfactants can also disrupt the lipid layer on top of the cuticle. Sulfates can also be irritating to the scalp and the hair follicle. And if the hair follicle gets irritated over time, it can eventually lead to hair loss. And not only that, but sulfates can also strip hair color. Now it is true that most hair products have smaller amounts of sulfates and are formulated with a lot of other ingredients so they are not as bad as dishwashing detergent. But we don't know the exact % in formulations because that information is not provided. If you have curly or coily hair, or hair that is damaged, bleached, it is best to avoid sulfates altogether, and to use a more gentle clarifying product.

Other common anionic surfactants are sulfonates such as olefin sulfonate. These compounds possess a carbon-sulfur bond. This bond is stable at a much wider range of pH values, so these compounds can be used in acidic environments. This means that shampoos with olefin sulfonate at acidic pH are less damaging to curly hair and do a better job at preserving the acidic pH of the scalp and hair. This is a better option. Thus, the least drying non-sulfate clarifying shampoos you can use contain:

- C12-14 olefin sulfonate
- C14-16 olefin sulfonate or
- C14-26 olefin sulfonate

Note

'Caution' means that the ingredients in italics may be drying, especially if the shampoo is used too frequently. Because of this property, these products are not CG

Note

Under Density (Low/High), we are referring to whether the product is optimal for low density or high density hair by the First Five ingredients; if zero, or only one oil or butter in the First Five ingredients, the product should not weigh down low density hair

Note

The shampoos included in this guide are all sulfate- and silicone free and often contain olefin sulfonate in the First Five ingredients

How To Use This Guide

There is a lot of information in the guide - don't get overwhelmed. We have done the work for you. All you need to do is:

1 - Take our Hair Quiz.

2 - Read the short introduction in the guide.

3 - Review the icons at the top of the guide.

4 - Check the icons underneath each product.

5 - Match the icons with those at the top of the guide.

6 - Select those products that match your hair characteristics.

For example, if your hair is thin or thinning (low density) look for products that are marked for low density hair.

7 - If you are allergic to certain ingredients, such as aloe or coconut, avoid products with those icons.

8 - If your hair is limp or damaged, pick products with the protein icon.
